"Why, then, of course, you'll have to keep on doing things of that sort. Oh, I know all about it. I tried it myself when I was first married, and later I had to ruin two coats before I could break your father of the habit of bringing everything to me. Just listen to the voice of experience, daughter, and make a bungling job of that, even if you have to tear it all out and do it over again. A Feminine Mystery.

Among the minor mysteries of life is the bewildering fact that, as a rule, the tall woman is of a melancholy disposition, while her smaller sister is of a bright, brisk and cheerful temperament. Science, so far as we know, has never addressed itself to the solution of this puzzle, and the amateur philosopher is therefore left to cudgel his brain and marvel. Why length of limb should make for solemnity and melancholy, says a writer on this subject, is hard to determine. Length of limb seems to suggest to the mind the need for a stateliness of deportment, which never troubles the consciousness of "the small and tubby." We are left to conclude that the feminine side of our nation, which is rapidly becoming famous for its extreme height, will some day be-come as serious and gloomy as Quakers, and then we shall take our pleasures more sadly than ever.-London Globe.

The old schoolmaster was deeply af-fected. His scholars, noticing the di-lapidated appearance of his chair, had presented him with a new one on his birthday.

"My dear boys," said the kindly old pedagogue, with tears in his eyes, "I can never hope to tell you how much you have made me feel by this token of ur love for me. All I can do is to thank you for the sacrifices you have made of your little purses for the sake of my comfort. If you have found me severe at times, I trust you realize that it has always been for your own good. I hope to always have your full confidence, as you have ever had mine."

As the old schoolmaster prepared to sit down in his new chair he unconsciously ran his hand over the seat in search of bent pins.—New York Times.

Rousseau was a type of the melancholic temperament, assuming some-times the symptoms of a veritable pathetic insanity. He sought to realize his phantoms in the least susceptible circumstances. He saw everywhere enemies and conspirators, frequent in the first stages of insanity. Once, coming to his sailing vessel in England, he interpreted the unfavorable winds as a conspiracy against him, then mounted an elevation and began to harangue the people, although they did not under-stand a word he said. In addition to his fixed ideas and deliriant convictions Rousseau suffered from attacks of acute delirium, a sort of maniacal excitation. He died from apoplectic attack.

In her reminiscences Henriette Cockran relates an amusing anecdote of Robert Browning. She relates that as she sat in the drawing room of her London house one afternoon she happened to look out of the back window. "And there," she says, "I saw Mr. Browning nursing a goose, absolutely carrying it in his arms. The poet came into the hall with the goose. I laughed, remarking that it was a queer kind of pet. 'It is so clever and affectionate,' answered Mr. Browning. 'It is not well, so I am look-ing after it. It follows me about just like a dog.'"
